The Marylebone Cricket Club is the framer of the Laws of Cricket, the rules governing play of the game. The Laws are intended to apply to all two innings matches; the International Cricket Council has implemented "Standard Playing Conditions for Test Matches" and "Standard Playing Conditions for One Day Internationals" to augment the Laws of Cricket. Similarly, each cricketing country has implemented Playing Conditions to govern domestic cricket. The Laws provide for One-day, or Limited overs cricket (including Twenty20) by stipulating that the number of innings per side may be one or two, and that each innings may be restricted to a maximum number of overs, or a maximum period of time.

The Laws retain the Imperial units as they were originally specified, but now also include metric conversions.

The Laws are organised into a Preface, a Preamble, forty-two Laws, and four appendices. The Preface relates to the Marylebone Cricket Club and the history of the Laws. The Preamble is a new addition and is related to "the Spirit of the Game;" it was introduced to discourage the increasing practices of ungentlemanly conduct.

Eight amendments were made to the laws which dealt with bad light, the toss, spirit of cricket, practice sessions, fielding athleticism and rare dismissals on 30 September 2010 w.e.f 1 October 2010. These amendments can be read here.

The version of the laws currently in force is the Laws of Cricket 2000 Code, 5th Edition, which came into effect on 1 October 2013. It incorporates amendments to a large number of laws.

Structure of the game

Laws 12 to 17 outline the structure of the game.

Law 12: Innings. Before the game, the teams agree whether it is to be over one or two innings, and whether either or both innings are to be limited by time or by overs. In practice, these decisions are likely to be laid down by Competition Regulations, rather than pre-game agreement. In two-innings games, the sides bat alternately unless the follow-on (law 13) is enforced. An innings is closed once all batsmen are dismissed, no further batsmen are fit to play, the innings is declared

In this website there are different tabs each must serve a specific function. First there is Home tab which will show all the basic information such as Live score of the ongoing matches and recently played matches. It uses different links which leads to a full scorecard of any match. Then there is another tab which will use video and text to make user understand the rules and regulations of the game. Followed by the tab with match highlights and all other latest videos. Finally there is a ranking tab which will show the standings in different tournaments. All these tabs use the same design with the help of a CSS file. This also uses the tables and graphs to show the detailed results. In this website whenever the mouse will hover over any tab it will change its color and if the tab is opened at that time also it will show up in different color. The complete website follows a fix layout throughout all the pages. On every page at top left corner there is a logo and at the bottom left there is signature watermark.
